Susan Bonilla

is fighting to create opportunities for women to succeed

Susan Bonilla understands the challenges that women face to get ahead in the workplace.

A mother of four, Susan Bonilla worked as a classroom teacher, local Mayor, and County Supervisor, while raising her daughters. Susan has a firsthand understanding of the importance of workplace protections for women, income equality, and creating opportunities for young girls to grow and succeed.

As a high school teacher, Susan helped give her students the tools and confidence to excel in the classroom and go on to college or a good career.

In the State Assembly, Susan has been a strong voice for women. She has led efforts to improve workplace protections for mothers and encourage more women to work in science, technology, and engineering.

Susan Bonilla will be a champion for women in the State Senate, fighting for important issues like:

- Equal pay and benefits for equal work
- Workplace protections for pregnant women and working moms
- Expanding programs that encourage women to enter industries like technology, science, and computers
- Improving access to college and job training programs
- Protecting access to women's health care and specialty doctors
